

HOW RECRUITERS CAN UNLOCK ENGAGEMENT ACROSS THEIR CANDIDATE WORKFORCE

Global talent shortages remain a major challenge for recruiters. Overall candidate experience, worker engagement and employer branding are crucial for attracting and retaining top talent. So how can recruiters deliver the best experience to maintain engagement, so that, in turn, they support their own and clients' success and profitability?

Gallups' latest State of the Global Workplace report finds that global employee engagement has stagnated. The report shows that low employee engagement in 2023 cost the UK over £257bn annually – that's similar to the amount it cost to run the NHS the previous year (11.3% of GDP).

According to the report, employees in the UK lag behind Europe across a number of engagement measurements. Just 10% of workers in Britain are engaged, with nine in 10 either not engaged or actively disengaged in their work.

THE COST OF POOR EMPLOYEE ENGAGEMENT

Low engagement doesn't only cost employees their wellbeing, but can significantly cost the business too, with disengaged employees costing the UK up to £70 billion per year on average in lost productivity.

Conversely, engaged employees are more productive, stay longer with the company, and deliver better outcomes. Basically, investing in employee engagement is investing in the success of your business:

Engaged workers take less than half the number of sick days of disengaged employees

Organisations with high worker engagement give 22% higher returns to shareholders

Organisations with a highly disengaged workforce have 62% more accidents

Companies with an engaged workforce experience 17% higher productivity, 20% higher sales and 21% higher profitability

Providing your clients with the peace of mind that you give enhanced worker support to the temps working on-site is a game-changer that can set you apart from your competition, strengthen your relationship with them and boost your reputation in the wider market.

Attracting and retaining the best talent is one of the biggest challenges. Candidate acquisition can be one of a recruitment agency's biggest investments, but often much of that talent is never engaged with or placed on assignments and sits in the deep dark hole of your ever-expanding candidate database, unless you have sophisticated software and intelligent automation to actively target and map these 'dormant' candidates with roles and regular engagement.

There's a growing number of forward-thinking agencies taking active steps to engage and look after their talent to secure a stronger brand and reputation and ultimately cement loyalty from their candidates. Not to mention those becoming part of strong movements to improve the welfare and working conditions of key contingent labour, such as those Governed by the GLAA.

GET AHEAD BY BEING MOBILE-FIRST

If you're going to achieve sustainable candidate, worker and employee engagement, then you have to provide the tools and tech they need to progress and achieve their goals. Workers need to feel motivated by what you can offer, and that they have the resources to turn that positivity into results.

Employee engagement is highly subjective, and it's very easy to waste money on tech and tools that simply don't match what workers want to feel supported and valued. This is why sustainable engagement is such an important concept, because if you're able to continuously maintain worker and employee interest, then you know you're investing well.
